Ninety percent of the artifacts from the 2014 terrestrial field schools have been processed and conservation has been initiated on artifacts from the underwater excavations. The lab class students in the fall were able to process and analyze specific features and units for their reports. This semester lab workers have continued working to completed the rest of the artifacts. Much of the data is in ready for analysis and the principle investigators from last summer’s work will give you a look at what their crews found.

Dr. John Worth and crew continue to study the Spanish Mission site near Molino. Dr Ramie Gougeon and crew worked on a number of sites associated with caves near Marianna and a Creek homestead in Santa Rosa County. Excavations continued at Arcadia Mill Archaeological Site under the field direction of Adrianne Sams, the Arcadia Site Director.

This next field season will start mid-May and will, depending on class enrollment, offer excavation opportunities for terrestrial archaeology students at the Molino mission, Arcadia Mill, the Creek homestead in Santa Rosa County and several other possibilities. Underwater excavations will continue on the Emanuel Point II shipwreck with the Special Categories Grant from the State and other sites will be assessed and investigated in the bay and nearby rivers.

Check out Facebook pages for Arcadia Mill, Pensacola Colonial Frontiers (Molino mission) and University of West Florida Campus Field School. Keep these in mind during the summer so you will have up to date information.
