INTO DARKNESS: THE ARCHAEOLOGY AND USE OF CAVES IN FLORIDA

Please join us on Tuesday, Oct. 13 at the Bowden Building, 120 Church Street, for the October PAS membership meeting.

During one of the UWF field schools summer 2014, students investigated a number of caves in the Marianna area. One of the grad students involved, Gregg Harding, became interested in this for a thesis topic and has since been able to borrow archived collections from other sites from the Bureau of Archaeological Resources collection to further his study of the area's cave sites.

For thousands of years people have been utilizing caves in the southeastern United States. These caves have been used for shelter, burials, religious ceremonies, and have been mined for natural resources by both prehistoric and historic people. In Florida, caves have produced human remains, cultural materials, and even petroglyphs. Many of these caves still affect our lives through tourism, recreation, and scientific research. This presentation presents an archaeological look at the past and present use of caves in Florida.

BY THESE HANDS CEMETERY PROJECT—SEPT 17-19

UWF's Archaeology Institute is pleased to partner with FPAN and John the Baptist Church on a grant project entitled "By These Hands: The Vernacular Markers of Pensacola's Historic African American Cemeteries." Join us on September 17-19 to explore these amazing outdoor museums that feature handmade markers created by local craftsmen and artists, and to learn more about the city's historic cemeteries! PAS is providing refreshments for the Sept. 17 evening lecture. Visit the website or FPAN website for complete info. Make your reservations to participate in as many activities as you can. PAS members are especially encouraged to attend the Friday activities to learn about restoration and participate in hands-on activities.

Like all historic cemeteries, Pensacola's historic African American burial grounds are outdoor museums that reflect cultural attitudes and adaptations. The vernacular markers that dot early 20th-century African American cemeteries in Pensacola are not merely physical marks on the landscape - they have a powerful story to tell about the African American community as a whole. The story of Pensacola's vernacular cemetery markers encompasses individuals, occupations, ideologies, and expressions. Through a series of professional talks and tours and the development of interpretive materials, the story of Pensacola's African American cemeteries will begin to emerge. By bringing this story forward, we will be sharing the story of Pensacola's historic African American cemeteries and we will also be weaving the threads of our story into an expanding tapestry that links us, as Floridians, to a regional, national, and world heritage.

VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITIES:

FPAN LAB— Volunteer at the FPAN lab downtown beginning 8/24 from 10 am to 4 pm Mondays and Wednesdays this semester. No experience is necessary.

UWF LAB— The staff at the lab at UWF will be teaching the archaeological lab methods class this semester. For the first 6 weeks of class, students will be learning about and studying for tests about artifact identification. These activities will require most of the lab space. Beginning Oct. 5, the UWF lab will be open for volunteers from 10 am to 2 pm on Mondays. Be sure to stop for a parking pass at the Visitor's Center.
